“ I am so sad that Joe is gone. Not only was he a kind, lovely, perpetually smiling, fun loving person, he was a perfectionist in his work. There was no finer painter. He was an artist and maintained the highest standards. I doubt we will ever see another like Joe again. I extend my deepest condolences to his family. Joe will be greatly missed.

“ So sorry to hear of Joe's passing. I had seen him the week before. Back a few months ago I saw his truck. I had to stop and ask if he was the south end Joe? He said he was. I grew up next door to Joe and Mike. It's been a very long time. But was great to see him again. I will miss seeing him as I pass his house daily on my way to my son's home. May he rest in peace.

“ Joe always put a smile on my face. His quick wit and snarky banter was the thing I adored most about him. He was adored by both of my children. He stayed close with my family and attended graduations (he watched my son go from little league to college) and every birthday party.. even though he was always late 😞. We would joke about his lateness but he would always say “I showed up didn’t I?” He will be truly missed and never forgotten. I send strength and love to all of you.

“ I am forever grateful I was able to see and be with Joe before he departed. Our recent visit in ICU allowed us top catch up and rehash Maginn memories as if they happened yesterday. Even with his illness, physical discomfort and being in ICU, Joe's humor and goodness remained in tact. And his radiant smile never wavered. He will be greatly missed by his friends and classmates from Bishop Maginn, and the many people with whom he shared his goodness and love. To the best of our ability, we will try to pass on,... what he so generously passed on to us.

Be at peace, Joe.

“It’s hard to describe exactly who Joe Varno was to me. I don’t think there’s a word in the dictionary unique enough to do our bond justice. In my book, Joe falls into his own, perfectly imperfect box. More than a friend, he was someone I especially revered. I looked up to him as a mentor, and equally appreciated his quirky persona. On the surface, Joe was a full-time painter who worked hard to get by...but in reality he was a part time guardian angel/part time cartoon character. He both amazed and amused me. In his dirty white painter pants and vibrant blue American little league coaching shirt, Joe dressed every day as a superhero who flew under the radar. Unaware of his impact, he lived each day with profound simplicity, and the type of exuberance that is both infectious and rare. A storyteller who would always make you smile, Joe lived up to the hype. He loved to chat with people, and often started each story with his city slicker phrase, “Let me tell you somethin!”. He had a great sense of humor and a charming wit about him that was hard not to like. Lastly, and most importantly I think, Joe Varno was a volunteer baseball coach who dedicated countless hours of working with underserved youth. This is where I met him, and this is where Joe shined the brightest - in spite of the harsh blight that often trickled into the ballpark. Joe cared about all the kids at American little league, and he protected them the best he could. I learned more from Joe about working with those kids than I did in teaching school. We would often play good cop/bad cop. I would play the ‘good’ cop - only because it was easier, and Joe played the ‘bad’ cop and handled everything so effortlessly. He ran the show, and knew how to get through to those kids. Before me, it was Joe coaching on his own for years...alone, with no one watching. Now he’ll be coaching God’s children. A man who put the character in character, Joe Varno was as authentic as they come, and will always reside in a rarified atmosphere...one of purity. I’ll really, really miss him. But I’ll always remember who he was. Thanks for being a guiding light. I love you, Joe.
